North Carolina Opens Major Art Museum

RALEIGH—A new tourists' attraction in the South will open here today in the form of the first major art collection purchased with State appropriated funds.

Containing over 200 paintings, valued in excess of $2,000,000 and including masterpieces by Rubens, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Andrea del Sarto, Frans Hals and other masters, the North Carolina Museum of Art is situated in a four-story, fireproof building adjacent to the State Capitol.

The museum features in its entrance a portrait of Sir Walter Raleigh, whose expeditions resulted in the first English settlement in America—the mysterious "Lost Colony" on Roanoke Island, North Carolina, established in 1585.

An outstanding collection of Spanish still life paintings of the 17th and 18th centuries, and notable assemblies of the works of 16th century Italian artists and 17th century Dutch and Flemish paintings are other features of the museum.

One of the four floors of the museum is due to the fact that the State Legislature, in 1947, set aside $1,000,000 for the purchase of works of art to match the Kress Foundation gift. Over the past five years this State fund, together with the Robert F. Phifer and other funds, has been used to acquire a collection of Old Masters which, with donated works, place the North Carolina facility in the front rank of art museums.

Painting and tapestries together with decorative furnishings and sculpture are arranged in chronological sequence according to period and the nationality of the artists.

Donors of works of art include Doris Duke, Mrs. Frank LaForge, Walter Chrysler, Jr., Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, John Hay Whitney, Mrs. James Forrestal, Lady Marcia Cunliffe-Owen, Chauncey McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Linsky, and several North Carolinians: Ceasar Cone, Mrs. Laura Cone, Ralph Price and Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Lee Brooks of Greensboro, Dr. and Mrs. Robert Lee Humber of Greenville, John Motley Morehead of North Carolina and New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Lunsford Long of Warrenton. Three gigantic Flemish tapestries of the Gothic period are the gift of Doris Duke.

The nucleus of reference works for the Museum's art library was purchased with a gift from the North Carolina Federation of Woman's Clubs.

Governor Luther H. Hodges, and other state officials, as well as art donors and authorities from all over the country have been invited to the Museum's formal opening, according to Dr. Robert Lee Humber, president of the North Carolina State Art Society. Program chairman for the opening is State Treasurer Edwin Gill, executive vice-president of the State Art Society. Guest speaker will be Dr. A. M. Frankfurter, editor of Art News,

Burns Trexler, Shop; and Glenn Yates, Carding.

All day long a 70-year-old school bus driver mystified the bloodmobile staff as they collected blood at an upstate New York clinic. He kept coming into the clinic with a donor, disappearing, and returning with another recruit. "How come?" he was asked. I'm too old to give Red Cross my blood; so why shouldn't I find younger men to take my place?" was the answer.

An Important Event

Today marks an important cultural and historical event for North Carolina: the opening of the new State Art Museum at Raleigh. Thousands of State Art Society members, donors, the nation's leading dealers, collectors, museum officials, art critics and ambassadors of nations as well as state dignitaries will be at the formal opening tonight. Throngs of proud North Carolinians as well as visitors from other states will go through the gallery during this week end and the subsequent weeks, months and years.

The million-dollar collection, bought with legislative approval, will be one of the outstanding attractions of this state and of the entire South. North Carolina is the first state to make such an investment. It is the amazing result of a campaign by Robert Lee Humber of Greenville who pursuaded the Assembly to put up $1,000,000 for the collection to be matched by the Kress Foundation. Since then he has done much to create the gallery from the deserted state highway building.

During the past year some $250,000 worth of gifts of great works of art have been donated to the museum by philanthropic and public-spirited citizens throughout the country and several here in Greensboro.

It would be an impossibility to measure the worth of this great gallery in terms of dollars and cents. The fact that the works of such a large number of the world's masters of painting, sculpture and tapestry are now on display for anyone who can get to Raleigh is almost incredible.

Not only will this treasure-house serve as a Mecca for those who are already devotees of these masterpieces, but also as a hall of learning for the young students of the state and for others seeking education in art appreciation. It will be a great heritage for the generations of the future.

Every citizen of North Carolina should consider himself a personal possessor of his state's fine art collection and make it a point to visit the gallery not once but many times.

Today's event at Raleigh is indeed one of the most laudable in our state's history.

Miss Sylvia Cranford was winner in the vocal category on last Saturday at the District No. 6 Music Contest held in Winston-Salem. This entitles her to compete with finalists from the 16 districts in North Carolina at the State finals at Raleigh on April 14. She is being sponsored by the Junior Woman's Club of Salisbury.

The contest is a project of the music department of the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs. The state winner receives a $100 scholarship. The contestants must be high school seniors.

The Bible Speaks To Your Need

By Rev. W. L. Bennett, Pastor
Sixteenth St. Baptist Church

There is no doctrine more clearly, repeatedly and dreadfully set forth in the Bible than that of the literal destruction of this earth on which we live. "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night;- in the which the heavens shall pass with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3:10) These are the amazing words of Eternal God given by the Holy Spirit through the Apostle Peter. They are true and faithful, spoken by God who cannot lie. In the pre-atomic age, men scoffed at such prophecy as being fantastic, impossible and incredible. But now science is bearing out the testimony of the Bible. The power to destroy the world is in the hand of wicked men, science declares. Once the mind of science said, "The sun rose yesterday and will rise tomorrow as it has been rising every day since the creation, and this idea of destruction of the material universe is unscientific and you need not be afraid of any such thing as that taking place." (Nume) Contrast this, if you will, with a statement by the editor of the Atomic Bulletin several years ago. "We live in imminent danger that an untoward event tomorrow may trigger a tense world to erupt in flames of atomic or thermonuclear warfare and that there will be no place to hide for the great masses of civilized mankind." As I read this latter statement, I immediately thought of Peter's prophecy quoted above. Peter prophesied world destruction; so does science today. Peter prophesied destruction by fire; so does science today. Peter prophesied an end to the world order as we know it; so does science today. Whether Peter and the scientists have in mind the same and identical event, we cannot say. But who knows but God will permit wicked men to destroy the heavens and earth by their own inventions, abused and misused? Sin will be the cause of world destruction, and man may be the victim of the own sin of which he is guilty. At any rate, it is interesting to hear the scientists admit today what they once concluded scientifically impossible. Is God rising up materialitic science to be an inadvertent witness of radical divine truth, since many will hear only what science has to say?

As we ponder these grave predictions of world destruction and judgment upon wicked men, may we ask:

"When the great business plants of our city
Shall have turned out their last finished work
And when the merchants have sold their last order
And dismissed every last tired clerk,
When our banks have raked in their last dollar
And have paid out their last dividend
When the judge of the earth wants a hearing
And asks for a balance—What then?
When the choir has sung its last anthom
And the preacher has voiced his last prayer,
When the people have heard their last sermon
And the sound has died out in the air,
When the Bible lies closed on the altar
And the pews are all empty of men,
When each one stands facing his record
And the great book is opened—What then?"

Home Industry Gets Second Place In U. S. Foreign Trade Policy

WASHINGTON—The Administration is so deeply entangled in foreign commitments of the State Department, it is all but powerless to deal with trade crises of major U. S. industries, Congress was told last week.

The charge came out in testimony prepared for delivery before the House Ways and Means committee by J. Spencer Love of Greensboro, chairman of the board of Burlington Industries, Inc., and Roger Milliken of Spartanburg, S.C. president of Deering, Milliken and Company.

Speaking for the National Council of Textile Industries, both said the sovereignty of the United States would be jeopardized by membership in a proposed new 34-nation agency, the "Organization for Trade Cooperation." in which the United States would have only one vote and no veto.

They recited a list of reasons why Congress should vote against U. S. entry into OTC, as sought in a bill now under consideration.

OTC is designed to be a permanent administrative agency for the 34-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trades (GATT) whose policies Mr. Love said are directly responsible for much of the textile industry's trouble over recent years.

"The net result under GATT," he said, "has been the contraction of U. S. textile export markets and the opening of our domestic market to a full-scale attack by overseas industries operating western-type machinery at Oriental wage levels.

"Under such circumstances, there is little liklihood hat the needed equity capital will be forthcoming to modernize and expand the U. S. textile industry in line with peacetime needs, much less essential defense requirements."

Mr. Love detailed numerous ways in which the textile industry has cooperated in Point 4 and similar projects to assist foreign economic recovery, then added:

"When the end result of such programs is permitted to lead to the gradual confiscation of our major industries, to the gradual loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs and to the ultimate desolation of entire communities, the textile industry can only rise with all the strength it can muster to protest what is not only the grossest sort of injustice but what will also lead to ultimate economic suicide."

Mr. Milliken's testimony described GATT as a "giant octopus" which already has entrapped the U. S. government to the extent that the Administration has been unable to cope adequately with dangers confronting American industries.

"Even in the adjustment of our current trade policies we are so bound by GATT as to be ridiculous," he said. "To escape from it altogether would be so complicated a matter as to be virtually impossible, except by dissolution of the entire organization.

"One purpose of OTC is to make such dissolution impossible. It would surround GATT with walls of steel impregnable to any act of Congress which might have the effrontery to amend foreign trade policy in the interest of the United States."

The South Carolina manufacturer said foreign nations pay lip service to the ideal of reciprocity but their record of exemptions, waivers, exceptions and other escape devices speaks for itself as to their true motives in being members of GATT:

(1) To get into the "Amen corner" of the American aid and gratuity program and (2) to help pave the way into the markets of the United States for thier export products.

Congress was warned by Mr. Milliken not to ratify the OTC-GATT agency and thus surrender its power to make future economic policy determinations of vital concern to American business, industries, employees and consumers.

He set forth a detailed report on how GATT treaty decisions and regulations are so intermeshed and binding that in time, when centrally administered by OTC, one supernational agency would have dictatorial control over any country's foreign and domestic economy, with power to decide on industrial production, markets and internal business practices.

His testimony concluded on the thought that for the United States to join OTC would be to "sell our birthright for a mess of pottage."

The appearance of Mr. Love and Mr. Milliken marked the first time that witnesses had come before Congress on behalf of the National Council of Textile Industries, made up of the American Cotton Manufacturers Institute, National Federation of Textiles and National Association of Wool Manufacturers, thus representing most of the country's cotton, man-made fibre and woolen mills.

Who Gets How Much Of America's Corporation Income?

Ten years ago the writers of this piece rushed in where angels feared to tread and conducted some experimental research into the division of the total income of American corporations.

At that time the available statistics were sketchy, and putting them together required a lot of educated guesswork.

After much conscientious study and soul-searching, we came up with the following estimate of who got how much of the corporate income after payment of outside costs and taxes:

For the human energy of employees ---------- 80%
(Wages, salaries and benefits)
For the wearing out of the tools used by employees ---------- 10%
(Depreciation, obsolescence, etc.)
For the use of the tools supplied by owners ---------- 10%
(Profit, dividends, retained earnings, etc.)

(The importance of these three items lies in the "sociological" fact that they represent the entire divisible income of any corporation: whatever the employees and owners receive is revealed by these statistics.)

The publication of these figures created quite a stir among both the critics and defenders of our corporate system, and the work was praised or condemned according to what different people wanted to believe.

We could only say that we believed our estimate to be very close to the truth.

That was in 1946.

Today the truth is known, thanks to a new table of figures made available for the first time through the Federal Reserve Board's study entitled, "Flow Of Funds In The United States."

This study enabled us to get the actual corporation figures for a six-year period (1948 through 1953.)

Here is the way the total income (after payment of outside costs and taxes) of all America's corporations was divided during those six years:

For the human energy of employees ---------- 82%
(Wages, salaries and benefits)
For the wearing out of the tools used by employees ---------- 7%
(Depreciation, obsolescence, etc.)
For the use of the tools supplied by owners ---------- 11%
(Profit, dividends, retained earnings, etc.)

Of the amount collected for the use of the tools, about ¾ was paid out in dividends and ¼ retained in the business.

This reinforces what we have long maintained, namely, that the historical comparison between payroll and dividends is about 10 to 1.

We would be less than human if we did not say "we told you so" to our skeptical critics, but a much deeper satisfaction comes from the knowledge that at last America knows the truth about something that has been a source of great controversy and friction.

Incidentally, it is worth mentioning that the tools perform more than 95% of all the work done in American corporations.

It would seem, therefore, that the reward for supplying the tools is a modest one.

Distribution Plays Big Part

Our free economy's distribution system accounts for 67% of the nation's business today. This includes selling, packaging, advertising, transportation—all that happens to a product after it leaves a plant or farmer's field until it reaches the consumer or user.

Distribution is one of the nation's three leading economics activities, along with production and agriculture.

You may not realize it, but the goods sold by one salesman or saleswoman represents paychecks to 33 other men and women on farms and in factories and offices.

Benlee's won two from Edmond's Drug, with Ila Roberts bowling high set and high game, 281 and 107. For Edmond's, Nell Walker almost reached the 300 mark, bowling a 299 set, high for her team.

Second Graders Have Most Accidents

Miss Doris Hutchinson has just reported accidents in the Greensboro Public Schools for the first six months of the school year 1955-56. It is significant that the number of days lost from school for non-school accidents amounts to 191½, whereas the days lost from school accidents amounts to only 102 days.

By grades the largest number of accidents were: second grade 44, third grade 38, sixth grade 36.

By place of occurence there were 120 accidents on school grounds, only 2 took place on concrete play areas.

Sprains led the list in the type of injury with 71. There were 59 cuts, 51 bruises.

The cause most frequently reported was a fall, with 107.

The first newspaper ever printed on a train was issued by Thomas A. Edison when he was between twelve and thirteen years old. As a newsboy on a Grand Trunk local between Port Huron and Detroit, he set up a second-hand printing press in the baggage car to print his "Weekly Herald."
